This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

When the first edition of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA appeared, in 1899, it presented itself as a new and untried experiment in the field of American bookmaking. It was the first book ever issued which claimed to be, in any comprehensive degree, a general biographical dictionary of notable American contemporaries. The compilation of such a book from the results of original research was obviously a task full of difficulties, and these were mentioned, with some fullness of detail, in the preface to the original volume.

Those interested in the production of the book looked forward, with strong confidence, to a favorable reception for it. But the event outran the expectation. The highest hopes that had been entertained scarcely approached the actual cordiality and enthusiasm with which the book was received by the critics and the public. The amount of attention given to the work by literary critics showed that WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA was regarded as one of the most important publications of the year 1899. Indeed, one of the foremost American journalists characterized it as being entitled to first place in the literary output of that year. It was everywhere hailed as a valuable addition to the list of indispensable reference books. The approving critics included not only those connected with the great newspapers, but also those of the leading literary, scientific, and technical magazines and reviews of America and Europe.

Gratifying as was this wide approval by critics and literary experts, a still more valuable form of endorsement has appeared in the voluntary testimonials to the usefulness of the book which have come in connection with the actual daily use of the old and the preparation of the new volume. These testimonials now reach into the thousands, and show a high degree of appreciation, which has been a powerful inspiration toward painstaking care in the work of the present volume.

The Preface to the 1899-1900 edition somewhat timidly intimated that periodical revisions of the book would be made, and suggestions along that line were invited. A few months after the book had been issued it became apparent that a new edition was demanded, and as time went on it became more and more certain that the revision must take the form of an entirely new book, so numerous were the additions and so extensive the changes required.

The results of the revision and enlargement of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA are now placed before the reader in the present book. As to the enlargement, the increase in the number of biographical pages from 827 (including Addenda) in the first to 1,280 (including Addenda) in the present edition, and of names from 8,602 in 1899 to 11,551 in 1901, bears sufficient testimony. Of the 8,602 names in the old edition, 752 have been omitted from the present one. Of these 498 are known to have died, and their names are recorded in the Necrology of the present volume. Among the other 255 who have been dropped are some who were included in the first edition solely because they then belonged to some one of the arbitrary classifications embraced in the book. Being no longer in those classifications, they have been omitted. There are also a few omissions of people whose present whereabouts careful inquiry has failed to disclose. Some of these may also be dead.

With reference to the extent to which revision has been carried out, it may be stated that of the 7,850 biographies appearing in both editions not more than 10 per cent are entirely unchanged. Each of these 7,850 biographies has been sent to its subject with a request for revisions and additions. Many of the life-sketches have been entirely rewritten; mistakes have been rectified wherever discovered, and new matter has been added. A feature of the volume is the insertion of the parentage in every sketch for which the necessary information was obtainable. The parentage was not given in the first edition. In the case of authors a strong effort has been made to secure complete lists of all of their published books. To this end special blanks were sent to all authors, asking them for lists of their books with dates of original publication and names and addresses of present publishers. The response to the first part of the request was so general that (although there are still some omissions) the present edition of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA is believed to contain the most complete list of living American authors and their works which is now extant. The addition of dates to the titles of the books is a new feature which has been added wherever the information was furnished. The adding to the date of a key-symbol indicating the name (and address where known) of the firm publishing the latest edition of the book is a unique innovation which it is believed will be of much value to authors, librarians, publishers and all interested in books. The only thing to regret in connection with this feature is the failure of numerous authors to furnish the information required to make this apply to every book listed.

With regard to the addition of new names, the endeavor has been to adhere to the high standard which governed the selection of names in the first edition. The idea of the plan pursued has been to make the inclusiveness of the work more perfect, but at the same time to retain its features of exclusiveness. Some lines of distinction are much more extensively represented than before: this being notably the case with reference to artists and authors.

The enlargement of the book is not the result of padding, but of extended scope. In fact, the necessity for careful condensation has been more apparent in the new than in the old book, and a much more extensive use of abbreviations has been made. These abbreviations are, however, of a simple and conventional character, and will in almost every case be at once understood, without need of reference to the list of abbreviations, which can be consulted readily if any difficulty of interpretation shall be found.

The invitation extended in the first edition for suggestions of improvement, new names, notice of omissions or of errors, etc., has called forth much correspondence which has been incalculably helpful in the work of the present volume. It is, of course, true that not all of the good suggestions could be adopted. Some of them, excellent in themselves, would have required a large increase of space. As it is, the enlargement has exceeded expectations in regard to the space required by the additions and improvements incorporated in this edition.

One of the suggestions made was that a classified index be appended in which the names should be listed according to occupation or line of distinction. The value of this suggestion was so obvious that considerable test work was done with a view to its adoption. To do the work thoroughly it was found, however, that nearly every name would have to be listed from two to four times, requiring approximately about 35,000 entries, or about 100 pages. It was impossible to spare so much space, and the work was reluctantly abandoned.

The work of selecting new names and procuring biographical material has been prosecuted with the utmost zeal and care; but, while the results have been very gratifying, it is still true that there are names which should be included that are absent. In a country of over seventy-six millions of people even approximate success in the judicious selection of a certain class of distinguished names is a difficult task; and after they are selected appropriate data in regard to them are not always procurable. Therefore, even with the utmost effort, there will always be an unrecorded remnant.

The labor connected with preparing a work of this kind is arduous, and the gathering of so much information and reducing it to condensed statement involve efforts that are strenuous and serious. The task is, however, not unrelieved by amusing incidents and grotesque side-views of various idiosyncrasies, and of humorous phases of character and thought. Many of these revealed themselves in revisions of sketches which appeared in the first edition. To one man, recorded in that edition as "married," without further particulars, a proof was sent for revision, with a note: "Please give the maiden-name of your wife." With the return of the corrected proof came the following: "I am sorry I can not comply with your request to give you my wife's maiden name, as she is now traveling in Europe."

An amusing comment on another sketch returned without revision was: "This is correct, and is, it seems to me, just what such a note should be: careful, accurate, no bouquets, no bricks." Not quite so complimentary was the following from a leading western poet and critic: "I take pleasure in revising the sketch of myself in the game of Literary Tag, or Who's It."

In the Information Blank sent to those requested to furnish biographical data the line which was oftenest overlooked was that of "date of birth." Not only did many ladies ignore it, but some men also. One lady wrote in: "I am not young enough to be careless, nor old enough to be reckless." Several wrote in the line such comments as "not necessary," or "leave out." One lady, to whom the printed sketch from the first edition was sent for revision, wrote underneath it: "Please substitute the enclosed typewritten sketch, which is much better." Examination revealed the fact that the typewritten matter was identical with the printed slip, except that the date of birth was omitted.

The death of 498 out of a total list of names numbering 8,602, will perhaps seem, at first glance, to be a rather alarming bill of mortality, being about 29.4 to the 1,000 per annum. But when it is considered that the book is made up of men and women of achievement, and that a large number are people who have led lives of great activity and are now old, the number is after all not surprising. One of the noteworthy facts which came to light in compiling the Necrology is the total elimination of the name of Daly from the present volume, although there were four of the name in the first edition: Augustin Daly, the dramatist and manager; Charles Patrick Daly, jurist and geographer; Marcus Daly, miner and capitalist, and William D. Daly, congressman and lawyer.

In the list now presented the birth-dates extend back to 1804 (including the senior Rear Admiral Selfridge), and cover probably every year down to 1883, when Mary Antin, the "child author," was born. Probably the next most youthful (unless others have used reticence as to age in order to conceal youth) is Margaret Horton Potter, the authoress, born in 1881.

The experiences connected with those who desired to be left out or who struggled to get in were similar to those mentioned in the Preface to the first edition, but the latter class was, as a general thing, the more persistent. One man, after revising his sketch in ink with much care and particularity, made faint pencil-lines diagonally across it and then wrote underneath: "Please leave me out." The poetess, who two years ago, wrote, "Wait until I am dead before you embalm me," renewed her objections in practically the same words when asked for a revision. Several offered as substitutes for the submitted copy long eulogistic sketches. One demanded that a typewritten sketch of twenty-two closely written foolscap pages be substituted for the printed record of as many lines which had been submitted to him. Several actors asked to have extracts from especially favorable press notices appended to their sketches. Two or three of the same profession, as well as others in various vocations, thought their notices would look better with a portrait, and sent their photographs for reproduction. One man, who has had a somewhat meteoric newspaper career, made copious additions and further said: "This will do, if you can't do better—but I would like about a stickful more space. This is a good thing."

Many and strenuous were the efforts to procure admission by persons whose applications had to be declined. A few who suggested themselves were included, being persons whose position or achievements made them eligible. There were, as in the first edition, many who tried to buy their way in; but, as before, the book has been kept entirely free from any buying or selling of space, except in the plainly designated advertising pages, which have themselves been carefully guarded from objectionable features. WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA has gained such a well-established reputation that the sincerity of its statements in this regard is seldom doubted. It is now very rarely the case that biographical information comes with the appended note: "The above information is given with the understanding, as stated by you, that it places me under no pecuniary obligation whatever," or words of similar import. Such caution is entirely unnecessary. The policy of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA in this respect has been permanently adopted, and, whatever may be the errors of inclusion or omission, they are solely mistakes of judgment, entirely unbiased and unprejudiced. The publishers are, of course, very glad to sell the book to all who care to buy it, but mention in it is in no way controlled by the question of subscription.

The most valuable aid in the matter of selecting names to be represented has been their suggestion by persons already in the book. Many men of eminent ability have given cheerful and hearty coöperation in this respect. The names of these are quite too numerous to list, although Dr. W J McGee, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, for renewed favors; Mr. Joseph B. Gilder, of The Critic; Mr. Franklin B. Wiley, of The Ladies' Home Journal; Mr. Edward Stanwood, of The Youths' Companion, are among the many whose kindly service in this respect has been especially cordial and valuable. There are hundreds of others—publishers, journalists, scientists, educators, librarians, litterateurs, etc.—who have helped.

In a few instances attention has been called by correspondents to errors of judgment made in the selection of names for the first edition. It had been expected that criticism would be directed principally toward errors in the admission of names. As a matter of fact, however, the errors of inclusion were either very few or excited little attention. Scarcely a score of names in the first edition have been challenged as unworthy. The omission of individual names has been the subject of most of the criticisms made by those who have written. Yet even here the majority have been kind enough to express their gratification at the completeness and carefulness with which the task of selection has been carried out, at the same time that they have noted some specific omission.

It is hoped that the enlarged scope of the present volume will make the usefulness of the book for biographical reference more complete than ever. In order that those not familiar with WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA by the use of the first edition may know the extent of the field it aims to cover, it may be stated in a general way that the present edition contains concise biographical sketches of 11,551 living men and women. They are either Americans themselves or are so closely identified with American affairs or interests as to be subjects of American inquiry or discussion. Thus, foreign ambassadors and ministers accredited to this country are included. So are some foreign actors, lecturers and others who, by frequent visits, or in some other way, have become subjects of inquiry or interest in this country. Endeavor has been made to include all Americans of more than local note in all lines of useful effort. Most of these have been selected as a matter of judgment for which no inflexible rule can be established. Many others, however, have been arbitrarily included, the ex-officio admissions aiming to embrace all members of the Fifty-seventh Congress; all governors of the States and Territories now in office; all United States judges; all judges of State and Territorial courts of highest appellate jurisdiction; also persons of other important official classifications; all presidential and vice-presidential candidates of 1900; members of the national committees of the two principal political parties and heads of the others; members of the National Academy of Sciences; members of the National Academy of Design; educational heads of all the larger universities and colleges; as well as some other arbitrary classifications.

It is believed that the book, with the condensed form of statement it has adopted, contains more biographical information than was ever before compressed into so small a space; and more than half of this is information which can not be found elsewhere in print. The former edition was characterized by one of our distinguished scientists as a "compendium of intellectual life in America," and by a famous diplomat and litterateur as "indispensable to any one who would keep pace with the age." In the production of the present volume there has been a constant endeavor to maintain the standard of work which has evoked these and hundreds of similar commendations. It mirrors the national life in all its various phases; the developments of science and industry; the marshaling of financial forces on a scale never before attempted; the building up of intelligence by the increasing magnificence and widening scope of educational facilities; the growing power of the Nation in military, naval and commercial strength; the development of literature and art; the ministry of the Gospel at home and abroad through American agencies; the progress and evolution of new social and political theories and potentialities. All these and other phases of American activity and progress are pictured through the life sketches of the men and women who best represent them. Here are epitomized the stories of opportunities grandly improved by thousands of men and women who have helped to shape the conditions of To-Day in American thought and action, and who are bearing an important share in fashioning the still more grand To-Morrow of our land. The book is full of sociological suggestion, and of much else that is worthy of more than casual reference. Even the flavor of romantic adventure is not wanting, for there are stories of explorers, of warriors and of pioneers, and of men, like Lamar Fontaine, for instance, whose true adventures surpass those of many of the most fanciful heroes of imaginative literature.

The volume for 1901-1902 is in all essentials a new book: every line reset, about 90 per cent of the old matter revised, and additions made which make the volume about 52 per cent larger than before.

The policy of appending to practically every sketch the present address of its subject is the one which has involved the greatest expenditure of time and labor and a vast amount of correspondence. It is scarcely possible that any reader can conceive how difficult this work has really been with reference to quite a large percentage of the total number. Persons sought for in the Rocky Mountain region have been finally located in Paris. People whose last suggested address was in Maine have been found in California, and in many cases a dozen or more letters have been necessary to procure the desired information. But the results are fully worth the trouble. One distinguished man testified that through its agency he had been enabled to open correspondence with a score of college friends whose addresses he had sought in vain for years. This feature of a handy directory combined with a biographical dictionary has met with the widest approval and appreciation. The proved usefulness of the book has extended to practically all classes of men and institutions. Its use by newspapers is, of course, very great, and that it is indispensable in libraries is also equally obvious. It has taken, also, a very prominent place in educational institutions, and particularly in universities and colleges, where its accessory value in connection with practically every branch of higher education has gained the widest recognition.

With a view to future revisions, as time or necessity shall make them advisable, suggestions for further improvement, changes in biographical data, notices of deaths and announcements of changes of address as they occur, are again invited.

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS

Among the preliminary discussions in the original edition of WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA was an article which was inserted with a view to analyzing as accurately as possible the educational advantages enjoyed by the people biographically mentioned in the volume.

The statistics there presented, with the deductions made from them, attracted wide and interested attention, and very many requests have been made for a similar presentation of educational statistics in the present edition. In addition to these requests, the extended current discussion, as to the value of the higher education as a factor in success, has seemed to make the compilation of such statistics in this edition timely, as well as useful. Some writers have maintained that the higher education is a detriment rather than an aid to success, while others have stoutly defended the advantages of a college education. Of course the strength of the argument, either way, depends very largely upon the individual definition of the word "success."

Of the 11,551 people whose brief biographies appear in the present edition, 9760 have furnished educational data, more or less complete, concerning their general or special education. These are people who have, in some line of effort, become sufficiently well known away from home to make the publication of biographical facts about them seem desirable. Many of them are successful people, from any definition, although not all are successful in the same way.

Of course, the value of these statistics depends primarily upon the accuracy of the information upon which they are based; and, secondly, upon the manner in which that information is statistically used.

In preparing the following figures the data furnished in regard to education of each subject have been examined. It has been necessary to eliminate from consideration all post-graduate work, in view of the fact that so large a proportion of post-graduate degrees are honorary that their value for statistical purposes is not ascertainable with even approximate accuracy. Therefore, the highest point in education to which these statistics reach is the baccalaureate degree, and for the purpose of this inquiry the degree of each collegiate institution must be taken as representing a general average of education. In the items relating to general education there have been no duplications, so that where the subject has attended one or more colleges besides academies, public schools, etc., there has been only one entry, and the higher includes the lower. Following are the figures:

4521	are graduates of universities and colleges conferring baccalaureate degrees in letters, science, or philosophy.
965	others attended like institutions, but were not graduated.
889	closed their scholastic career in academies, seminaries, and other institutions of a secondary grade.
117	finished in normal schools.
239	have a high school education only.
808	have merely common or public school education.
282	were privately educated.
31	are self-taught.
366	were educated in foreign institutions.
1791	furnish no educational data.
717	were graduated in medicine.

Digitized by Google

327 were graduated from technical schools as engineers, architects, chemists, agriculturists, etc.
494 are theological graduates.
521 were graduated from law schools.
121 were graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy.
14 naval officers were not graduated as such.
168 were graduated from the U. S. Military Academy.
36 military officers were not graduated as such.

In the foregoing there are about a thousand duplications, which represent those who have furnished facts concerning their technical or professional as well as their general education. Many, however, particularly physicians and lawyers, have given the details of their professional training, but have omitted all other reference to their general education. The 1791 who furnish no educational data include a certain number of persons about whom there are only a few identifying words, because further information could not be obtained. Others have simply omitted to furnish details of their education. Yet the absence of such details by no means implies lack of education, because many of them are engaged in pursuits which make sound scholastic training imperative. It is probable that if these had all supplied the information desired the relative numbers in each classification would have been practically the same.

For the purpose of the present comparison these and the 366 educated in foreign institutions may be eliminated and the inquiry may be confined to the first eight items, with the addition of the naval and military graduates, or to 8141 out of the total of 11,551 names in the book. Of these, 5486 are collegians, or, if the naval and military academies are accorded collegiate rank, the number is 5775. Only 313 (282 privately educated and 31 self-taught) did not attend school, and of the remaining 7828 only 808 stopped with the instruction received in the common schools. It should be remembered, however, that by far the larger number of those who went higher received their early training in the public schools. The most noteworthy fact is that of the 8141 who furnished full data in regard to their general education 5775 are collegians, and 4521 (or 4810 if West Point and Annapolis graduations are considered equivalent) have been graduated from colleges.

In regard to professional training, lack of time has prevented careful comparison, but it may safely be said that less than one-half of the lawyers have recorded themselves as having attended law schools and less than one-half of the clergymen are graduates of theological schools. Most of the members of both professions have pursued their professional studies in other ways. The artists, sculptors, musicians, and actors have for the most part gained their preparatory studies under private direction.

Considering the character of the people concerning whom the foregoing figures and deductions have been compiled, the latter may be of some value for the purpose of illumining the current discussion of education as a factor in success. Another fact that may be worth emphasis as indicating the value of the deductions here made, is that a comparison between the figures given here and those presented in the first edition, on precisely the same basis, show close similarity in results, the ratios being very nearly the same between the different items, notwithstanding the increased number of names in the present volume.

In the foregoing table 65 foreign countries, as well as the 45 States, 6 Territories, and the District of Columbia, are represented. Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands are classed as "foreign," and Hawaii as domestic, for the purposes of this review. The officers of the army and navy who are in service beyond seas are not included in the list of foreign residents, but are credited to the District of Columbia, because their permanent addresses are in care of the War and Navy Departments, respectively.

The totals show, as to birth-place, 9,800 natives, 1,281 foreign-born, 9 born at sea, 461 not reporting. Eliminating the last two items for the purpose of computation, 88.44 per cent are native and 11.56 per cent foreign-born. All of the American States and Territories contribute to the birth column except Alaska, Arizona, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oklahoma and Wyoming.

As to present residence only 370 live permanently abroad, 11,137 live in the United States and 44 do not report. Of those abroad 108 are in England, 76 in France, 28 in Italy, 23 in Canada, 19 in Germany, 11 each in Japan and the Philippines, and less than 10 each in any other country. Among domestic residents the largest figures are represented by New York, Massachusetts, District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, California, Connecticut, Missouri, and Maryland, in the order named.

In the birth column the largest figures, in order, are those of New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Maine, Virginia, Indiana, Vermont, New Jersey, Kentucky, New Hampshire and Maryland. New England, which furnishes 2,435 to the birth column, has only 1,631 in the residence column. The District of Columbia, Florida, Illinois, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Tennessee and Wisconsin are the only States east of the Mississippi in which the residents exceed the natives in this table. Every State and Territory west of the Mississippi (including Louisiana) is more largely represented in the second than in the first column.

The large number in the second column for the District of Columbia is due to the location there of government officials and employes. Senators and representatives in Congress are, however, accredited to their home States.

Taken as a whole, the table shows the western trend of population and the extensive concentration of many important activities in the larger cities. If the statistics could be compiled with greater detail, the latter named fact would appear even more strongly. Other deductions (and the table suggests many) must be left for the individual reader, but it is believed that this table will be found interesting and valuable as indicating the extent of the dispersion or concentration of the higher activities and achievements of the notable people of the United States.
